PHILHARMONIA BAROQUE ORCHESTRA PRESENTS
TRUMPET VIRTUOSO GABRIELE CASSONE
IN FOUR BAY AREA PERFORMANCES
FEBRUARY 11 THROUGH 15

January 27, 2011, San Francisco, CA -- Music Director Nicholas McGegan and Philharmonia Baroque present a program that highlights a rarely heard period instrument – the keyed trumpet – played by the Italian virtuoso and leading scholar on historical brass instruments, Gabriele Cassone.

Cassone is a sought after performer for both leading period instrument orchestras (including the English Baroque Soloists and Amsterdam Baroque Orchestra) and contemporary music ensembles. He was selected by Luciano Berio to premiere his works for solo trumpet: Sequenza X for solo trumpet, and Kol-Od, which he performed with L'Ensemble Intercontemporain under the direction of Pierre Boulez. Cassone is also the author of The Trumpet Book, a study of the history, repertoire, and technique of the trumpet.

With Philharmonia Baroque, Cassone performs Johann Nepomuk Hummel's Concerto for Keyed Trumpet. Composed in 1803 – and long forgotten until its rediscovery in 1958 – the piece is now established as among the most popular in the trumpet repertoire. Because historically accurate keyed trumpets are so rare, specially built modern valve trumpets are often used to play this work in its original key, E major. For this program, however, the keyed trumpet takes its rightful place. Introduced around 1800 by the Viennese court trumpeter Anton Weidinger, the keyed trumpet marked a step in the evolution of the horn. It lies between the natural horns of the Baroque – those usually heard in a Philharmonia Baroque concert – and the valved brass instruments of more recent times.

The program includes two other distinguished works: Symphony No. 1 by Felix Mendelssohn, composed when he was just 15, and Symphony No. 2 by Louis Spohr. Spohr may not be as familiar to us as Mendelssohn, but his contemporaries held him in high esteem and he is known today as the “Forgotten Master.”

“Thirty years ago, the Orchestra played only Baroque music,” says Music Director Nicholas McGegan. “Then, in about 1988, we ventured a little later and played Mozart. In the 1990s, we explored the music of Mendelssohn and did a memorable performance of Berlioz's Les Nuits d'Été with the late Lorraine Hunt Lieberson. Last season, we pushed our period instrument boundary still further with an evening of Brahms. This season, we are pushing the boundaries of our repertoire again, playing music by three Romantic composers from Germany and Austria – Mendelssohn, whom we know very well, and two new acquaintances, Hummel and Spohr... I am thrilled that Gabriele Cassone will be playing a rare period instrument – the keyed trumpet – with us in Hummel's delightful concerto."
